Amkai announces the foundation of Amkai University™

Amkai University will develop and deliver educational materials to users of Amkai's software solutions

Waterbury, CT --- August 7, 2008 --- Amkai announced today that it established a special division empowered to design, develop and deliver comprehensive educational materials and services to users of Amkai's software solutions.

Amkai University will deliver the most extensive array of educational materials available, including user manuals, release notes, on-going webinars (current series are available on www.amkai.com), audio-visual training materials, and training sessions at Amkai's National Education Center in the company's headquarters in Waterbury, Connecticut.

"A lot of planning went into the establishment of Amkai University", said Craig Veach, Amkai's Senior VP. "This is just another step toward our full commitment to deliver the best user experience possible", he added.

"Our experience going back to 1984 has clearly proven that education is paramount for the ultimate user experience. We have seen good software used less than adequately because of lack of training. Even with the best effort, user typically do not take full advantage of the capabilities of our software. Our aim is to ensure that Amkai University will allow our users to derive the most of their investment in our software solutions", said Dean Moriniti, VP of Client services.

"Amkai University's webinar series have already been implemented. Participation has been very satisfactory. We already see results. Our plan is to cover all areas of Amkai Charts™, Amkai Office™, and Amkai Enterprise™ from basics to advanced features. Topics in these webinars are covered by experts in the particular area covered", added Jason Troiano, VP of Technical Services.
